Mikvah means future

Many Jews consider the synagogue the central institution of Jewish life. Yet, according to Jewish law, building a Mikvah takes even greater precedence. In fact, both a synagogue and even a Torah scroll—Judaism's most sacred possession—may be sold to fund the construction of a Mikvah.

But the Sages didn't stop at necessity. They envisioned the Mikvah as a place to be cherished—by the women who use it and by the community that upholds it. They taught that a Mikvah should be welcoming, peaceful, and beautiful.
Why? Because while we can study Torah at home, form a minyan on the go, and give tzedaka at work, there is one thing that cannot be replaced:

To build a new generation—rooted in holiness, nurtured with love—we need a Mikvah.

Living Waters

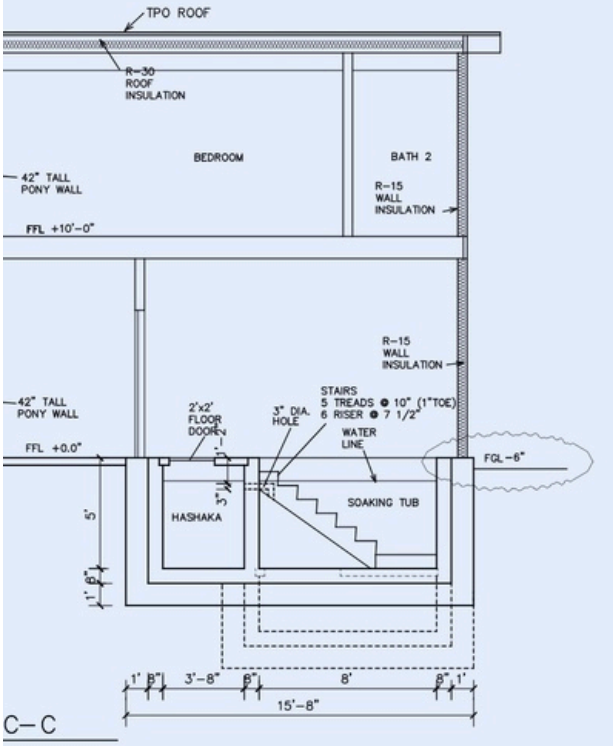

In the beginning, there was only water. This miraculous compound is not only the foundation of all nourishment but the very source of life itself. Yet in Judaism, water represents even more. Its physical properties — its ability to give, sustain, and renew life — are reflections of a deeper spiritual truth. Water possesses the power to purify, to cleanse and revitalize, returning us to our most essential, spiritual selves.

As our community continues to grow, so does the urgent need for a Mikvah. The Ojai Mikvah will fill a vital void by providing a state-of-the-art, spa-like facility that enables the sacred and timeless mitzvah of Mikvah to be observed with dignity, beauty, and ease.

With this incredible growth comes a profound responsibility: to meet not only our community's physical needs, but its spiritual needs as well. Your generous support of The Ojai Mikvah Campaign will help fulfill this sacred obligation—now and for generations to come.
